One day course, Saturday, 17th November 1984, 10.30am-5.30pm, in the Penguin Room, First Floor, Wills Memorial Building, Queen's Road, Clifton, Bristol.

TUTOR: Trevor Rowley BA MLitt FSA Department of External Studies University of Oxford

Author of 'The Norman Heritage'

THE NORMANS

REF: B84 C05 SC

FEE: £4.50

The Norman Conquest is generally regarded by all as a turning-point in English history. Not only was this the last time that England was successfully invaded, but it was followed by a complete change in the ruling dynasty, the introduction of military feudalism, the reform of the church and the rapid spread of monasticism. Such social and political changes were accompanied by dramatic architectural and topographical developments. was frenzied building activity resulting in the construction of cathedrals, churches, monasteries and castles, and stone was used on a scale unknown since the end of the Roman Empire. The Norman desire to exercise regional political control and to stimulate trade resulted in a rash of newly-planned towns across the country. In many more subtle ways too, the Anglo-Saxon landscape was altered and modified by Norman coercion and influence.

Through their energy and administrative ability, the Normans transformed the face of town and country alike and this course will examine the impact of the Norman Conquest upon the British scene, through both an historical narrative, and surviving structural remains of buildings and the patterns of settlements, communications and land use that developed during this period.

FEE: £18.75

Coppicing stool

This course will examine the relationship between man and the environment for the exploitation of natural resources in terms of material culture. Environmental studies are crucial to a full understanding of cultural development because the character of the environment both provides the raw materials for technological development and delimits its course. In the first part of the course Bruce Levitan will consider the use of natural resources from the environmental aspect: why were materials chosen for particular uses? What properties were exploited? etc. Vanessa Straker will then examine man's exploitation of natural resources for South West England: how did the character of the environment affect his development here? What aspects were exploited? etc. Five field trips will visit sites of particular relevance to this topic and region.

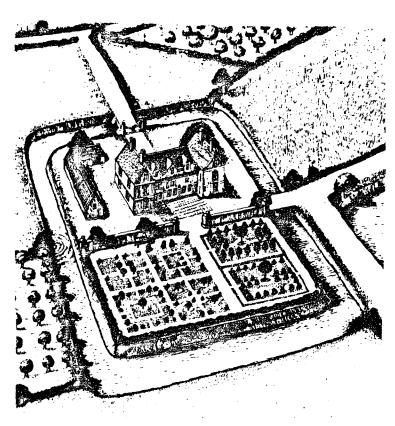

Prior enrolment is not essential and fees may be paid at an early meeting of the course.

THE ARCHAEOLOGY OF AVON

TUTOR: Rob Iles BA

County Archaeologist

REF: B84 J11 SC

FEE: £12.50

D LENGMUIR

The County of Avon is particularly rich in archaeological and historical sites of all types. This introductory course will not only look at the evidence from the prehistoric, Roman and medieval periods, but also the man-made remains of more recent times. There will be an opportunity to visit a number of local sites on two one-day field trips. The course will be useful to those carrying out parish surveys, but it is not necessary to have any previous knowledge.

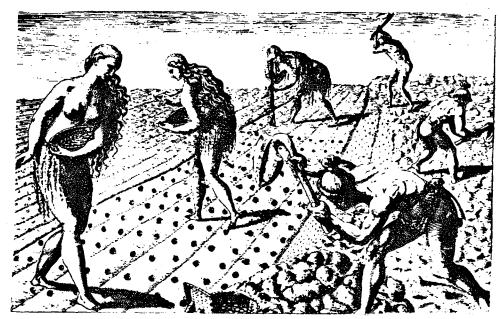

Enrolment for this course should be made at Stoke Lodge, and cheques should be made payable to 'County of Avon'.

SAVAGES & BARBARIANS:

Approaches to the study of Ancient Societies

TUTORS: Dr I Burrow BA FSA Mrs C Burrow BA MA REF: A84 D01 SC

FEE: £5.50

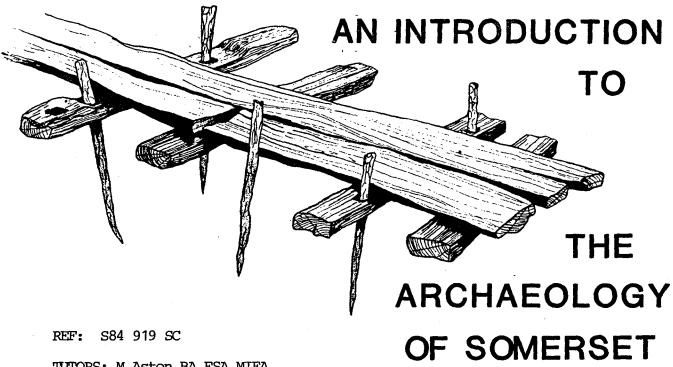

Anthropology and Archaeology have generally been regarded as distinct disciplines in Britain. Recently, however, there has been a move to bring them closer together, as is normally the case in North America. This course is intended to show how archaeologists and anthropologists can combine to throw more light on ancient societies. Evidence from the two continents will be compared and contrasted.

A residential weekend course, 7pm Friday 19th October 1984 to 1pm Sunday 21st October 1984, to be held at Dillington College for Adult Education, Dillington House, Ilminster, Somerset.

TUTORS: M Aston BA FSA MIFA,

Staff Tutor in Archaeology,

Department of Extra-Mural Studies,

University of Bristol

Dr I Burrow BA FSA,

County Archaeologist for Somerset

Editors of 'The Archaeology of Somerset' (Somerset County Council 1982)

This course will provide a basic introduction to the archaeology of Somerset, an area rich in monuments of all dates. It is aimed at students wanting not only a general introduction to archaeology and how archaeologists work, but also to the particular archaeology of the Somerset region.

No previous knowledge will be assumed and it is hoped the weekend will be informal, with lectures with slides and a field trip to some of the best sites nearby.

GODS & GODDESSES IN THE ROMAN COTSWOLDS

TUTOR: Dr Martin Henig MA DPhil

Gem from Corinium Museum showing the goddess Roma holding a wreath.

The historian Tacitus tells us that one of the priorities of the Roman Governer Cn Julius Agricola was to encourage the natives of Britain to erect Temples.

This dayschool will be concerned with the romanisation of religion in Britain. Special attention will be paid to the Cotswolds and neighbouring regions, where a number of temples have been excavated (eg: the temple of Sulis Minerva at Bath and the temple of Mercury at Uley) and a wealth of sculpture and other votive finds tell us so much about how men and women in antiquity approached their gods.

Dr Martin Henig lectures at Oxford University and is the author of Religion in Roman Britain (Batsford).

AN INTRODUCTION TO FIELD ARCHAEOLOGY

TUTOR: Ed Dennison BSc, MA

REF: A84 J33 SC

FEE: £12.50

This course will aim to make people more aware of the past and how it can be read from the landscape. It is an introductory course and no prior knowledge is necessary.

The course will concentrate on the Medieval period, although examples from other periods will be used. The lectures will be divided into two sections — initially, there will be an introduction to the medieval landscape in which features grouped under the general subjects of settlement, agriculture and industry will be examined. The second half of the course will then deal with the techniques of fieldwork. Various methods of recording sites seen in the first section will be investigated and, by using various documentary and other sources, a picture of the medieval landscape will be brought together. Finally, there will be two field trips to allow some of the knowledge gained in the lectures to be put to practical use.

Those with no prior knowledge of the subject may find the following books useful:

ASTON, M & ROWLEY, T: Landscape Archaeology (David & Charles, 1974)

TAYLOR, C: Fieldwork in Medieval Archaeology (Batsford, 1974)

HOSKINS, W G: English Landscapes (BBC, 1973)

CRAWFORD, O G S: Archaeology in the Field (Phoenix, 1953)

Field Archaeology in Great Britain (Ordnance Survey, 1973, 5th edition)

Prior enrolment is not essential and fees may be paid at an early meeting of the course.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL INTERPRETATION

REF: B84 J16 SC

FEE: £12.50

TUTORS:

B Levitan BSc, DoE Bone Analyst, SW Region V Straker BSc MSc, DoE Environmentalist, SW Region (Plant Remains) Dr J Rogers, Anatomy Department, Bristol University (Human Bones) J Jones, Bristol City Museum N Watson, Bristol City Museum

(Animal Bones) (Molluscs) (Diatoms)

The study of man's environment has become an integral and important part of archaeology, and has led to the development of a number of highly specialised techniques and disciplines which borrow from the natural and physical sciences. This course will provide an introduction to some of these techniques and will give practical instruction in the topics of bone analysis (Bruce Levitan) and analysis of botanical remains such as wood, seeds, etc (Vanessa Straker). Opportunities will be provided to study and analyse material supplied by members of the course. No previous experience is assumed, but a basic grounding in natural sciences would be useful (eg a knowledge of Biology to 'O' level).

PRIOR ENROLMENT IS ESSENTIAL for this course as it is a practical class and numbers will be limited.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTRA-MURAL STUDIES

The Minoans and Santorini

TUTORS:

MICK ASTON B.A., F.S.A. PETER HARDY B.Sc., Ph.D.

To be held in Santorini for 7 nights in early May 1985.

The unique combination of spectacular volcanic geology and superb archaeological remains make a visit to this stunningly picturesque island an unforgettable experience. This one week visit to Santorini will offer an opportunity to study the remains of the Minoan civilisation at one of the most important excavated sites, the settlement at Akroteri, and to witness the cause of their destruction, the now quietly brooding volcano.

The archaeological remains on the island include two and three storey houses, still standing alongside narrow streets and courts just as in modern Greek towns and villages, and from some of these have come some of the most extraordinary pictures of life in the ancient world ever to be revealed by archaeologists. These fresco murals now reside in Athens Museum but examples of superb pottery and many other fascinating aspects of Minoan life still lie around in the ruins for the visitor to admire. In addition to examining the Minoan and classical sites we shall look at various aspects of the volcano's history and a visit to the gently steaming modern crater will be arranged. The island's steep inner cliffs provided opportunities to examine the long history of eruptions which have resulted in the fantastic multi-coloured layer cake which the cliffs now resemble.

This symposium is intended to follow up the meeting held in Bristol in November 1980. Recent environmental work in the South-West will be outlined and discussion on potential and priorities for the future is anticipated. The South-West is particularly important, with areas such as Exmoor, Dartmoor, the Somerset Levels, and the drowned former coastal areas.

Lunch will be provided at £1.50 per person (optional).

A one day course, Saturday, 2nd February 1985, 10.30am-5.30pm, in Room 28, Wills Memorial Building, Queen's Road, Clifton, Bristol.

In 1983 Christopher Taylor wrote Village and Farmstead: A History of Rural Settlement in England. It has been hailed as a provocative and fascinating study challenging many of our ideas of how settlements have developed. At this dayschool, Chris Taylor will discuss some of the main themes of his study of settlement. It represents a unique opportunity to learn the latest ideas on how villages, hamlets and farmsteads have developed through the ages.

THE MEDIEVAL POTTERY INDUSTRY IN THE WEST COUNTRY

Using the combined evidence of deeply stratified urban excavations and petrological analysis, it is now possible to identify some of the areas in which pottery was being made in the Saxon and medieval periods, and for the first time much of it can be dated. In this course, therefore, an attempt is made to examine the ways in which this evidence can be of use to the archaeologist and the social and economic historian. The tutors have been closely involved in processing the results of the excavations in Gloucester and Exeter and will cover more generally the whole of the south-west of England.

ROMAN CRAFTS & INDUSTRIES

HELD IN ASSOCIATION WITH THE CORINIUM MUSEUM, CIRENCESTER

CHAIRMAN: Dr Alan McWhirr BSc MA FSA

REF: G84 D04 SC

FEE: £5.50

The conquest of Britain by the Romans had the effect of both stimulating existing crafts and introducing new ones, some of which were worked on an industrial scale. The army needed to be supplied with equipment and the early development of lead mining in the Mendips is a clear indication of the army's intention. As the towns developed, many crafts were utilised, including the working of wood, stone, clay, metals, glass, etc. This day school will examine three particular crafts/industries, namely lead/silver, brickmaking, and pottery, as well as discussing many other in general.
